Fifth graders finish study

Fifth grade students in the Appomattox Elementary School Think Tank program recently completed Independent Study Projects. Each student chose a topic, formulated questions, researched for information, shared their information, and evaluated their progress. Topics included spiders, stars, Hawaii, Polio, Baseball, Clowns, Detectives and Records of Incredible Events.

Independent Projects give students a chance to study a topic of their interest. An independent project, being self-designed by the student, comes equipped with built in decision making situations and allow students responsibility for setting goals.

JENNIFER NOTESTEIN (center) shares her independent study of spiders with Think Tank classmates.

Students produce school newspaper at AMS

Look out Times-Virginian, here we come. The A.M.S. Chronicle is back in production!

The school newspaper for A.M.S., which was organized last year by 7th grade teacher, Jeffree Wilkerson, is back on the trail of the current news stories around the middle school. Mrs. Wilkerson is taking a less active role this year and allowing the students to do the story selections and all the writing themselves.

"They have deadlines to meet, just as they would if working on a local paper," says Mrs. Wilkerson. "I believe in the students working on the paper and I encourage them to accept their responsibilities and be self-reliant."

At present the staff consists of 8th graders, but applications are presently being accepted. "The staff members screen each application on the basis of writing style, creativity, and grammar and they will be solely responsible for selecting new members. We have a number of plans for the club this year to insure a successful year."

Students prepared for deer season

By PHIL AGEE

It won't be long now. Soon many Appomatox County citizens as well as ACHS students will once again take to the fields in search of that trophy buck.

Hunting has always been a popular sport among many of ACHS' students. The decline in school attendance during past hunting seasons serves as proof of this.

According to ACHS principal Donald Armentrout, "large numbers of students have missed school in the past because of hunting season." The attendance problem has lessened significantly the past few years, however. The school board is working with the schools decided to count opening day as a teacher work day. "A very reasonable approach," was the way in which Armentrout described the effort.

Although opening day is a teacher work day, many students in the past have elected to take the whole week off to hunt.

When this happens, they are responsible for all work missed and the absence is not excused.

Surprisingly, early dismissals have not been a major problem during past seasons according to Armentrout. Most students choose to miss the whole day. There have also been cases reported in which students hunted early in the morning before school.

Opening day this year falls on Nov. 15. The opening day procedure will not totally cure the attendance problem, but it will eliminate a wasted day in which very few students would be present.

As opening day approaches, hunters will be preparing themselves for a big season. The school administration has also prepared itself by working around the opening day hustle. By doing this they have prevented wasting a school day and have also pleased many students. The administration should be commended for a job well done.
